

A black and white photograph of the First Methodist Church in Champaign, Illinois. The church is a large, Gothic Revival-style building with a light-colored stone facade. It features a prominent central entrance with a pointed arch, flanked by two smaller arched windows. Above the main entrance is a decorative gable. To the left, a lower wing of the church is visible, also made of stone and featuring arched windows. The building is set behind a row of trees, with a street and a utility pole visible in the foreground. The overall scene is a quiet, everyday view of a local landmark.
